

Auroras

A thrilling sequel of Breaking Dawn! The story continues...

By: Lydia 8/1

Preface

Sweating and panicking, I ran even deeper into the forest, not knowing where to go, not knowing if I was going in circles or not. I didn't know where I was heading to, but what I knew was that I wanted to go far – far away from this place which I loved so much and now dreaded it like blood. I hated all the people that I had loved and didn't want to be like them. I wanted to be a normal human being living a normal life, but I couldn't. I was running away from my deepest fears, fears that can't be shown in any way. I was running away from my deepest sorrows, sorrows that can only be expressed in tears. I was running away from my most beloved whom I lived for and still living for. Without him, I shouldn't have been here and would have killed myself long ago. I know how much pain he would go through if he sees me in pain or not in this world anymore, and I don't want that to happen. I still love him could neither see tears nor pain in his eyes, that's why I have to live; I will have to live for him. That's why I 'm here, here in the middle of nowhere, not knowing where to go. I'm running away from my past and trying to hide from my future. Anyway, what future do I have? I don't even know where I'm heading or what I'm going to do? I just know that I have to somehow forget my past and live my present, forever. I don't know how I am going to live without him, but I have to live for him!

As trailing through the forest I suddenly come into a clearing. My eyes get blinded because of the sunlight peering through the thick tree canopies. When I slowly open my eyes, I see a dark shadow (or ... silhouette???) coming closer and closer to me. He gives me a warm kiss on the forehead and says, "Good morning."